A ceremony was held in May at New York City's Fort Hamilton to rename a street for a Vietnam War veteran who earned the Medal of Honor.

Fort Hamilton's main street was renamed John Warren Avenue in honor of Army 1st Lt. John E. Warren Jr. The street was originally named for confederate general Robert E. Lee.

Warren, a native of Brooklyn, New York, earned the Medal of Honor during a battle on Jan. 14, 1969. As a platoon leader serving with C Co., 2nd Bn., 22nd Inf., 25th Inf. Div., Warren was killed when he used his body to shield an enemy grenade. His act of heroism saved three other soldiers in his platoon from wounds or death from the attack, according to his Medal of Honor citation.

Warren, who was 22 years old at the time of his death, also earned the Silver Star, Bronze Star and Purple Heart during his service in the Vietnam War. On Aug. 6, 1970, during a ceremony at the White House, the family accepted the Medal of Honor from President Richard Nixon on Warren's behalf.

Warren's sister, Gloria, later donated the medal to the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. Warren is buried about 40 miles east of Fort Hamilton at Long Island National Cemetery in Farmingdale, New York.

According to the Army, Warren's name was selected over six other candidates for the street's renaming. A board comprised of representatives of the fort and other military-related installations in the area chose to honor the Vietnam veteran.

commander, Army Col. Craig Martin, said that the Army is an “institution that embraces diversity and inclusion.” He added that the Army “rejects hate and prejudice” toward its service members.

“This street links this community together, and it’s the backbone of Fort Hamilton,” Martin said. “That backbone should be named after someone worthy of all we are as a diverse New York City population.”
